

On November, 25, 2009 the National Enquirer released a story stating that pro golfer and all around great guy, Tiger Woods had allegedly had an affair with Rachel Uchitel, a night club hostess from New York City. In the following months many more women would come forward and claim to have had affairs with the pro athlete and on December, 17, 2009 ABC news reported that, Elin Nordegren, Tigers wife, had filed for divorce.

With all of this drama clouding up Tiger's world we can only hope it hasn't affected his game. Not that I am trying to sweep his actions under the rug but, I think that the most important thing right now as Americans is to get behind our greatest asset, in regards to golf, and that is Tiger Woods. The last thing any of us want is to see this titan of golf's game suffer in any way. Yes his actions were shocking to say the least and I don't encourage or condone them, however I think were making more out of this than there really is. This is not the first time a man has been unfaithful to his wife and sadly it will not be the last. It is wrong of us to expect a televised apology, honestly it is none of mine or anyone other than his family's business who Tiger decides to invite into his bedroom.

Tiger Woods is debatably the greatest and most celebrated golfer of his or any other time, the man deserves some leniency. He is only human we cannot expect any more from him than we can from anyone else, so I propose we get off his back and let him do what he does best, play golf.
